I'm tempted at this point to conclude that Trakakis's suggestion that absolute idealism might solve the problem of evil better than standard theism is quite implausible. But then I run into the problem I mentioned. Trakakis is careful to say that his essay is just a sketch, a suggestion of a direction for further inquiry.

This led to my ongoing work in family caregiver research, which has been largely informed by the social problem-solving model and subsequent interventions that we developed. The houses below were homes to some caregivers and care recipients who participated in our home-based intervention research funded by NIH, NIDRR and the CDC.
